Questions & Answers:

Q 1: What made you want to write this book?

I didn't set out to write this book at first. I just began writing down things from my past that happened. And as I wrote the stories of my past, I found myself getting upset and sometimes crying. I decided to keep writing because this process was therapeutic, I felt a lot better. Those notes became the genesis for my book, #Blessed.

Q 2: What would someone get from reading your book?

My hope would be that people will understand how with faith, self-determination, and hard work they can over-come obstacles.

Q 3: What have you learned about yourself while writing this book?

I've learned a lot about myself emotionally, spiritually and physically. I have been through so much, yet I'm still here. I have also learned how to change my thoughts, which helped me in many situations.

Q 4: How has becoming an author changed you?

I have a new appreciation for writers and authors. I didn't realize how much work goes into writing a book until I wrote #Blessed

Q 5: What would you say to someone that has been though something like you or similar?

I would want them to understand as long as they have breath. They should always do whatever they can physically mentally and emotionally. That can help them better themselves on top of constant prayer.
